Robert DeLeonardis, managing director of Fenwick Keats Goodstein, one of the largest real estate firms in New York City, has been elected president of the Manhattan Association of Realtors (MANAR), the local chapter of the National Association of Realtors, the largest real estate trade organization in the country.

DeLeonardis was installed as president at an inaugural dinner on January 24. Richard Gaylord, 2007 president-elect of the National Association of Realtors delivered the keynote address.

DeLeonardis has close to 20 years of leadership experience within the real estate industry and served on the 2006 MANAR board of directors alongside Fenwick Keats Goodstein's CEO and its president, Rob Anzalone and Jeff Wolk, respectively. Wolk is also a founding member and himself, a former president of MANAR.
